These themes were not programmed to work with Windows Internet Explorer and your results WILL work better using Firefox...

But we also know many are still married to Internet Explorer, so in an attempt to make these compatible (which the developer should have done originally), we have spent a tremendous amount of time and resources to allow you to use Internet Explorer to install these themes.

The tweaked portion of the code is exclusive to your purchase at WackyCentral.com at the time of this writing, as a working alternative and for the purpose of those purchasing the "Ultimate Review Themes" from <http://WackyCentral.com> wanting to use IE.

Everything NOW should work as designed EXCEPT when it comes to entering your optin form code to create your signup form. We have given those instructions below.

Again, let us stress, to work properly and according to the originals, it is best to use Firefox to install the themes. We have provided our version of the fix, which is a tweak to the themes files and specifically coded to make it compatible with IE.

NOTE: The themes have been tested in IE version 8 only. Unfortunately, we cannot issue refunds based on any IE problems incurred.

To demonstrate the first and important problem in Internet Explorer, from IE you can view it on the developer's demo site.

(<http://ultimatereviewthemes.com/demo/>)

To configure your themes you must first access Wordpress via the Wordpress login screen. Here is the developers demo login screen:

<http://ultimatereviewthemes.com/demo/wp-login.php>

As you can see, where you are SUPPOSED to be able to log in to Wordpress, there are no boxes there to do so from Internet Explorer.

Because this is the developer's demo site, obviously you/we can't log in, but when using the IE version of these themes, this box becomes viewable in IE where you can enter your login info.

After entering YOUR login info on YOUR own installed themes, you can then click your "enter" key to proceed as normal.

Everything we tested to the best of our ability seems to be working as intended except the optin form.

To use the optin from IE, when going to paste your autoresponder code into the appropriate area you will FIRST need to go (in IE) to "tools" in the menu bar and click "compatibility view."

Then, prior to copying your code, double click inside the box and proceed to enter your copied autoresponder code. Be sure to save after entering the info.

NOTE: Only aweber java script and long form code were used for testing, although we did use a custom form code and it worked as well.

From there, you should be fine although we cannot guarantee the outcome or what the issues might be in any other browsers than IE8 at this time.

We did test in the current version of Chrome and the IE version appears to be working as it should there.

We thank you for your purchase and hope this helps those of you that are still in love with and working with Internet Explorer. ☺

As the masses say "...dump IE and use Firefox" :) As browsers go these days, it is becoming harder and harder to have everything compatible between them. Most programmers use Firefox and/or Chrome as their own testing format nowadays, so be aware that you can continue to experience problems in other areas with IE, especially with the new IE9. ☹

When in doubt, download Firefox here:

<http://www.mozilla.com/en-US/firefox/fx/>

That way it's available on your computer for quick access and use. :)

Again, thank you, and we hope you enjoy your themes.

Warm Regards,

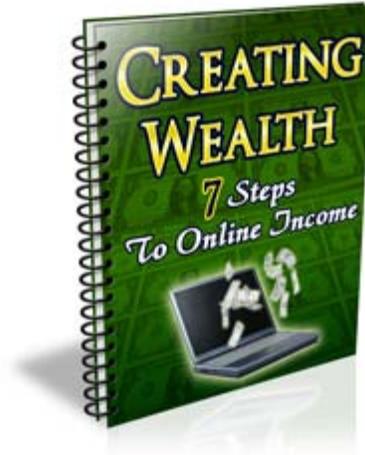

The Wacky Gals

P.S. There have been attempts to sabotage and/or redistribute our fixes. You can rest assured that we have inserted code – we know what files are ours, and have tested and retested to the best of our abilities.
